Panasonic With over half a century of skin in the game, it's weird to consider Panasonic an up-and-comer. Sony's 2021 catalog is was the first generation of sets to switch over to Google TV, an overhaul of the Android TV OS that features a faster, more intuitive user interface, complete with recommended and sponsored web content. That includes major streamers from Disney+ to Netflix, plenty of individual channel apps, and a wide variety of niche apps. Roku's smart TV user interface is a little less slick than webOS or Tizen, but we think it works better, and it's more straightforward. In 2022, expect Sony's TV options to reliably use Google TV. SmartCast updated that system by automatically curating a wide selection of apps without the need to download anything. We've already seen Mini LED technology in other devices like some Apple iPads. 2021 Vizio televisions also support voice control via both Alexa and Google Assistant; Google Assistant is a little more powerful, as it can search through apps for programs, while Alexa is a little more limited. It's seen better days, particularly when plasma TVs were the hottest thing going and Panasonic was the leader of that bunch. As such, we've put together a guide to all the best TV brands of 2022, so when the time comes to upgrade, you'll know where to start your search. The company is also making use of its TriChroma laser tech for improved color accuracy, and "ULED" panel technology to enhance images. Heavyweights These are the big boys — the brands that occupy premium real estate on both physical and digital shelves everywhere. It's a more affordable version of MicroLED tech where the LEDs are a bit larger, but still provide some of the same benefits, including better-localized dimming and contrast. Calling card: XR chip and Mini LED. Sony is now one of a handful of companies offering OLED televisions (the list has recently expanded to include Panasonic, Philips, HiSense, and Vizio) thanks to a deal with LG allowing Sony to build TVs using LG panels. Where past models relegated apps to the bottom of the display (similar to Samsung Tizen), LG's WebOS 6.0 sets utilize the entire screen for apps and other recommended web content. Thomson later sold the GE rights to TCL in 2004 and the RCA rights to Korea's ON Corporation, which currently makes RCA-branded TVs. Magnavox Magnavox may never have been the most dominant name in the American TV game, but it was a prominent player for some years following the technology's proliferation. Up-and-comers They may not be household names just yet, but these brands are on the rise, heading for the "heavyweights" division in a few short years. In 2022, Sony also announced a push into Mini LED technology, announcing its first Mini LED TVs like the Z9K series. Some companies (like Sony) are less prevalent worldwide, while others (TCL) sell more sets in the Chinese market. Panasonic isn't known for its disruptive technologies, but it does produce a number of reliable UHD OLED models. Contents At a glanceHeavyweightsUp-and-comersLegacies Choosing that TV, however, is up to you. Operating system: SmartCast Before 2017, all of Vizio's Smart TVs ran a system that required users to download an application on their smartphone or tablet, which would be used to cast any content to the screen. Legacies Remember these? Calling card: Variety OK, maybe this is something of a cop-out, but HiSense doesn't have one particular technology or aspect of its TVs to point to and say "this is our signature," though it's working on that task as we speak. HiSense Chinese manufacturer HiSense has been steadily making moves in the TV market over the years, licensing Sharp's brand name (and buying its North American factory outright in 2015), buying Toshiba's business in 2017, and making TVs under all three names for the U.S. market. Tizen places all your apps in a row along the bottom of the Smart Hub (read: Home screen). And whether you're looking for the absolute best TVs on the market, the best 4K TVs under $500, or something in the Goldilocks Zone like the best TVs under $1,000, you don't want to waste your time. For decades, JVC was one of the most well-respected TV brands on the market. With a wide range of sophisticated features, resolutions, sizes, and brands to decide on — from the leaders of the pack like Samsung and LG to close competitors like Sony, Vizio, TCL, and HiSense — there's plenty to consider before swiping your credit card. These are the TV brands many of us grew up with, but they're no longer leading the pack. Samsung South Korea's Samsung is the de facto market leader in the world television space, leading competitors like LG and Sony by a wide margin in terms of overall sales. Few companies sold more CRT sets over the back half of the 20th century. Editors' Recommendations Calling card: QLED and OD OLED Samsung has so far avoided producing OLED displays like those of LG, American customers, meanwhile, will have a much harder time finding any models locally. In 2011, JVC Kenwood ceased television production altogether and licensed the brand name out to Taiwanese manufacturer AmTRAN for the North American market. Perhaps most impressive is how Tizen works with the Samsung app family, including SmartThings, Smart Connect, and Smart View. After all, the average American watches more than five hours of TV per day. When that license expired, the next deal went to China's Shenzhen MTC, which currently makes TVs under the JVC brand in the U.S. and elsewhere. Sony Sony, standing as the last great Japanese TV heavyweight in the U.S. (sorry, Panasonic, Toshiba, and JVC), doesn't market as many proprietary technologies as Samsung or LG, but it has all the tech it needs to create awe-inspiring TVs. Operating system: Google TV (previously Android TV) Google TV — versions of which run on many other devices, like the Amazon Fire TV family — isn't quite as slick as webOS, but it's arguably more powerful. Today, it's the fastest-growing brand out there, offering up 4K UHD and HDR-capable models at preposterously low prices. That's partly a result of the company's size (Samsung ranked 15th in the 2021 Fortune 500, placing it as the second most valuable electronics company, behind Apple at number three), but mostly it's because Samsung makes great TVs with a focus on accessibility. Further, for this guide, we avoided putting a great deal of stock in a TV's operating system, considering the popularity and accessibility of streaming sticks and set-top boxes. What HiSense does offer is a vast selection of LCD TV offerings, utilizing a wide range of technologies and operating systems, all at great prices. The decision to invest in Canon's SED technology in the mid-aughts turned out poorly as well. In 2008, the company merged with Kenwood and closed many TV manufacturing plants in the next few years. 2022 is seeing even more OLED Evo TVs hit the market, making LG the best place to get your OLED upgrade. In 2021, LG introduced OLED Evo, an improvement on OLED technology that helps increase brightness by more than 20%. With the fall of plasma, the company has packed up its American dream and taken it back to Europe and Asia, where scores of consumers are enjoying some of the best OLED sets available. LG Another South Korean company, LG may not be as massive as the tried-and-true Samsung TV, but thanks to its OLED TV display technology, it has minimal competition when it comes to top-of-the-line picture performance. JVC still has a stellar reputation for projectors, which it still produces and sells. We'll see if that changes with 2022's LZ2000 OLED TV showcased at CES, but for now, Panasonic isn't worth considering unless you're on another continent. These TVs should appear in 2022, although Samsung hasn't given a definite timeline yet. Our only gripe with Android TV is that its implementation feels sluggish and unresponsive at times. In a nutshell, they were designed for mirroring. While TV screen size, picture technology, contrast ratio, backlighting, refresh rate, and stand-out smart features are improving every day, this means there's plenty more to consider nowadays when forking over the dough for your new living room set. QLED, Samsung's own LCD technology, uses quantum dots to enhance performance by producing purer light than LEDs are capable of on their own. You can use those to mirror content from your phone — even iPhones — to your TV or send TV playback directly to your phone (only on Samsung phones). So, instead of striking a deal to use LG's panels, Samsung branded its own LCD tech "QLED." For a detailed breakdown, check out our QLED TV versus OLED TV comparison, but the general gist is this: QLED uses quantum dots to enhance performance by producing purer light than LEDs are capable of on their own. Unlike webOS and Tizen, the Google TV home screen is laden with apps and suggestions, and you can scroll down for even more. It also had to phase out TV production to increase the manufacturing of other products. Vizio also now offers a WatchFree+ service, which allows users to watch free content on SmartCast from partners like Disney, Lionsgate, Sony, MGM, and others. In fact, their quality has improved so much that one of the latest versions with HDR support is our new recommended pick for a TV under $1,000 — and they have new, affordable 8K TVs now as well. It's got all the popular streaming apps as part of a 2,000-plus app library, and it has a neat feature that activates when you select an app, showing you popular sub-categories (like Netflix shows or Spotify playlists) for that app. (They do have universal text search, though, a la Roku.) Vizio has already announced that its 2022 models will be carrying on the improvements from 2021, including HDR/Dolby Vision formats, Dolby Atmos, and HDMI 2.1 — as well as faster processors. Also, Samsung's newer models — QLED and otherwise — offer some cool features like importing app logins from your phone to save time and the Samsung One Connect box, built to simplify messy cable nests behind TVs (and to enable cleaner wall-mounting). Further, Google TV has built-in support for Google Assistant (via a microphone in the remote or in your phone) and Chromecast, for both video and audio. Users can expect a similar experience to the new Chromecast with Google TV. The announced 2022 models will be carrying these improvements and look to be a great choice for an entry-level 4K model. LG's Magic Motion Remote has also been redesigned to support voice commands for both Amazon Alexa and Google Assistant, along with a Magic Explorer feature that lets viewers get additional info about the show or movie they're watching, from what actors appear in the series or film to notable trivia. Calling card: OLED OLED — Organic Light Emitting Diode — is the premier display technology today. They're affordable and are equipped with the latest version of Roku OS, featuring a dedicated Dolby Access channel to show off HDR-laden trailers. Operating systems: Roku, Google TV, VIDAA HiSense is unique in that it doesn't have a singular operating system tied to its line of televisions. Additionally, TCL expanded into Google TV territory last year with their popular 5- and 6-Series panels equipped with the latest Google TV operating system. Plus, gamers will be happy with Vizio's announcement of a free firmware update to its 2021 models, allowing for compatibility with AMD's FreeSync technology, which enables smoother graphics when used with compatible gaming consoles and PCs. It has also announced a dedicated Gaming TV, with a 240 fps frame rate and built-in Dolby Vision Auto Gaming, among other features. At a glance Brand Category Calling card Samsung Heavyweight QLED LG Heavyweight OLED Sony Heavyweight Cognitive Processor XR chip Vizio Heavyweight Quantum TCL Up-and-comer Value HiSense Up-and-comer Variety Note: Our categories, by and large, represent the U.S. TV market. To see how OLED stacks up against regular old LCD, take a look at our head-to-head comparison. The real nail in the coffin came in 2015, though, when (after years of flagging sales and a de-prioritization of the sector) Toshiba gave up on making TVs for the U.S. market. What happened? TCL TCL was barely a blip on the radars of seasoned LED TV reviewers half a decade ago. While the new sets were briefly pulled from U.S. Best Buy shelves due to software issues, a fix was issued and the retailer now stocks the popular TVs again. Due to the Cognitive Processor XR chip, Sony's Bravia flagship TVs will offer greater contrast, improved sound, low input lag, and faster web performance than we've ever seen. RCA For all the more seasoned folks reading, RCA was once the most respected bastion in American television development, having deployed the first-ever TV test pattern in 1939 (!) and pioneered the first color TV standard, NTSC (so named after the National Television System Committee) in 1953. If you've got compatible smart home devices, you also can use the TV as a control hub. We love Roku here at Digital Trends; from the affordable Roku Express to the Roku Streambar, the Roku TV platform's vast selection (5,000+) of channels and its snappy cross-app search function are second to none. And, if that's not enough, you can download the Logitech Harmony app to control your smart home devices from the couch. Around the turn of the millennium, JVC started seeing dwindling sales in its TV division. For a company that once reigned as one of the leaders in the CRT (cathode-ray tube) and rear-projection TV manufacturing, it's a shame, but Toshiba is still chugging along just fine, making other appliances and electronic control systems. 2022 also saw Samsung announce its expected OD OLED TVs, which use an advanced blue light source that acts as a hybrid between QLED and OLED. But, boy, have times changed. The big problem is that its TV sets just aren't available in North America any longer, which makes the brand very hard to recommend compared to similar, affordable TVs from HiSense or TCL that are readily available. The current models we are most impressed with are currently using Android TV, although at CES 2022 the company announced that all of its new ULED TVs and its A6H and A7H lines will use Google TV. Plus, as with Tizen, Google Smart Lock can automatically sync logins from your mobile device to your TV. Toshiba For most of the 20th century, Toshiba was the preeminent name in Japanese television manufacturing, having produced the first Japanese transistor TV in 1959, and started manufacturing TVs in 1953. A massive $6 billion-plus deal in 1985 saw the entire company sold to General Electric, then, in 1988, GE turned around and sold the rights to GE and RCA-branded televisions to French company Thomson. Operating system: WebOS WebOS — currently in its sixth iteration, WebOS 6.0 — completely revamps the LG smart experience. Operating system: Roku and Google TV TCL isn't the only company making Roku TVs — Insignia, Sharp, and Hitachi do the same, among other manufacturers — but it has been the most successful so far. JVC JVC used to be part of the Panasonic Corp. The 2021 lineup boasted vastly improved brightness levels and similarly improved local dimming capabilities at every screen size, with some displays utilizing up to 240 individual dimming zones. Calling card: Quantum As with Samsung, Vizio is big on quantum dot-powered panels. By the mid-1980s, RCA had been lapped by Japanese manufacturers and was no longer the powerhouse many remembered. Its TV line is only notable as an Amazon partner, which means they offer built-in Fire TV and Alexa voice assistant compatibility. As with Tizen, WebOS allows users to screen share (using Miracast), though that ability is limited to Android devices and Windows computers. In 1974, Phillips acquired Magnavox's consumer electronics division, later introducing and selling televisions under the "Philips Magnavox" brand name to try and bolster sales in the U.S. Eventually, Phillips sold those rights to Funai, which now makes TVs under both the Philips and Magnavox brands. Operating system: Tizen/Eden 2.0 Technically, it's called Samsung Smart TV Powered by Tizen, but let's just go with Tizen. If you can afford to splurge for a top-tier TV, you probably don't need to consider HiSense, but in the midrange, there's a lot to like here.
